Myers-Briggs Romance

(Continue ...) Extract from gifts that differ from Isabel Briggs Myers, Peter B. One way is the use of thought, that is, from a logical process, aimed at an impersonal discovery. Readers who prefer intuition are likely to read between and over the lines to the possibilities that come to mind. As soon as children exercise a preference between the two ways of perceiving, a basic difference in development begins. Those people who prefer intuition are so absorbed in pursuing the possibilities it presents that they rarely look very intensely at current events. All evidence is in and nothing more is irrelevant and intangible. Excerpt from Nicholas Brealey Publishing's permission. Yet we cannot safely assume that the minds of other people function on the same principles as ours. Each reflects the combinations of perception and judgment: Thurstone (1931), for a farm analysis of the scores of professional interest, found four main factors corresponding to the interest for people, people, language and science; Gundlach and Gerum (1931), from the inspection of the intercorrelations of interest, deduced five main "types of skill", i.e., technical, social, creative and intellectual, as well as physical skills; Spranger (1928), from logical and intuitive considerations, derived six "types of men", namely, economic, social, religious and theoretical, more aesthetic and political. The extraversion-introvert prefers the basic difference in the use by people of perception and judgment by people from their relative interest in their external and internal worlds. Copyright © 1995 CPP, Inc. . Although people obviously have to use both perception and judgment, both cannot be used at the same time. Other readers, who feel more interested in intuition than theory can predict for themselves and human nature in general, they are seeing it from the introverted point of view. introverted . etnedive ebberebmes eripecep id itnitsid idom id aznetsise' L . acilfneics atrepecs o avitaerc etra id itanorocni ipmese ilga "annod alled enoizuti" o elifhcas "enoizuti" alleb 'Aip allad onnav escnocni itubirtnoc itseuQ . trevartxe atsiv id otmap lad odnadraug onnats al ,airoet atseuq id ehcitarp inoizacilppa el eregnuiagar orebberow ehc . irottel iuca . oipmese da . artsimis al o artsed onam al emoc . enamir elarutan aznerferp al . ipli i libmartne rep . oreitsnep id oiziduig li odnasu ats icigol e iterepoc onos es ottutizmanni aredisnoc ehc erottel nu , iug etafnesrep eedi el eracidug leN . elibacoverri id asociaug eraf rep otserp oport A . inoizulnoc ella ereguig rep itnatsarnoc etnematten e itnitsid idom eud id aznetsise' llad onavired oiziduig len esab id aznerreffid al eracidug id idom eud . enoizuti rep n e otmemaveilir li rep s :NS aznerferp al 'A atseuQ . enamu inoizaler elled enoitseg allen otitua 'Aip atnevid eritnes ecisereferp ehc onimbab li . irlla ilg ititut ad otrevid 'A . idniug , e etneibma e . Most people would agree that they make some decisions with thought and some with the feeling, and that the two methods do not always reach the same result from a given set of facts. MyersCoright © 1995 CPP, Inc. All rights reserved. Type of work Chapter 1, Chapter 1 Type of work, Type of chapter 1 It is fashionable to say that the individual is unique. Children have enough command of their mental processes to be able to use the preferred processes more often and neglect the processes they enjoy less. Therefore, their main interest focuses on the facts, because the facts can be collected and verified directly by the senses – seeing, listening, touching, counting, weighing, measuring. The theory adds the suggestion that the two types of perception compete for the attention of a person. The personal warmth and commitment with which NFs seek and follow a possibility are impressive. This is the TF preference: T for thought and F for feeling. Combinations of perception and judgment The TF preference (thinking or hearing) is completely independent of the SN preference (sensation or intuition). The main interests of the introvert are in the inner world of concepts and ideas, while the extravert is more involved in the outside world of people and things. The theory suggests that a person is almost certain to enjoy and trust a way to judge more than another. They can excel in teaching (especially university and high school), preaching, advertising, sale of immaterials, counseling, clinical psychology, psychiatry, writing and most research fields. Intuition Plus Thinking NT (intuition more though) people also use intuition, but the team with thought. A means of perception is the family process of detection, with which we become aware of things directly through our five senses. All rights reserved. Most people find a more comfortable attitude than the other, they feel more at home in it, and use it as often as possible in dealing with the outside world. The answer is that the categories have been noticed repeatedly and by several investigators or theorists. Vernon (1938) cited three classification systems derived from different methods but which are surprisingly parallel. Perception is here intended to include processes to become aware of things, people, events and ideas. Therefore, when circumstances allow it, the introvert concentrates perception and judgment on ideas, while extravert likes to concentrate them orol orol a onrotni . The other is the intuition process, which is indirect perception through the unconscious, incorporating ideas or associations that the unconscious attacks on the perceptions that arrive arrive outside. Instead, they focus on possibilities, such as new projects (things that have never happened but could be made happen) or new truths (things that are not yet known but could be discovered). They often have a marked gift of language and can communicate both the possibility they see and the value they attack. It is very likely that they find success and satisfaction in the work that requires creativity to satisfy a human need. The child who prefers thought becomes more skillful in organizing facts and ideas. Both are happier and more effective in activities requiring the type of judgments that are best equipped to express. Things usually move faster for extraverts; Things move in a more considered direction for the introverts. In the NF people, the introverts (INF) elaborate their intuitions slowly and carefully, in search of eternal truths. Therefore, it is reasonable that the basic differences in perception or judgment should result in corresponding differences in behavior. Two ways of perceiving how Jung emphasizes in psychological types, humanity is endowed with two distinct and clearly contrasting ways of perceiving. In short, the theory is that a seemingly random variation in human behavior is not due to chance; It is indeed the logical result of some basic and observable differences in mental functioning. These basic differences concern the way people prefer to use their minds, in particular the way they perceive and how they form judgments. Myers. They often choose a theoretical or executive possibility and subordinate the human element. NTs tend to be logical and ingenious and have more success in solving problems in a field of particular interest, both scientific research, electronic calculation, mathematics, more complex aspectsfinance or any type of development or pioneer in technical areas. Everyone probably met all four types of people: people, who are practical andnice and friendly SF people; NF people, characterized by their enthusiasm and intuition; and NT people, logical and ingenious. The skeptical can ask how four seemingly basic categories of people could have gone unnoticed in the past. For example, between the ST, the introverts (IST) organize the facts and principles related to a situation; This approach is useful in economics or law. Each becomes relatively adult in an area where the other remains relatively childish. The other type of perception will be a background, a little fugitive. With the advantage of constant practice, the preferred process becomes more controlled and more reliable. The other type of judgment will be a sort of opinion of minorities, half heard and often completely ignored. That, the child who prefers thought develops along divergent lines of the child who prefers feeling, even when both love the same perceptive process and begins with the same perceptions. On the contrary, in the perceptive attitude people turn off judgment. From a practical point of view, however, the doctrine of uniqueness is not useful without an exhaustive case of study of each person to be educated or advised or understood. Too often, others with whom we come into contact do not reason as we explain, or do not appreciate the things we appreciate or are not interested in what interests us. The merit of the theory presented here is that it allows us to expect specific personality differences in particular people and to cope with people and differences in a constructive way. For example, readers who prefer detection will tend to limit their attention to what is said here on the page. People approach their decisions about these facts by impersonal analysis, because of their confidence in thought, with its logical process of Paso-step from the cause to effect, from the premise to the conclusion. Consequently, their personalities tend to be practical and e And their best possibilities of success and satisfaction are found in the fields that require an impersonal analysis of concrete facts, such as economy, law, surgery, business, accounting, production and management of machines and materials. People are also mainly based on detection for the purposes of perception, but prefer the feeling for the purposes of judgment. They are both enthusiastic and perspicacious. Extraverts (East) organize the situation itself, including any inactive bystanders, and roll things, which is useful for business and industry. A reader who is first aware that ideas are pleasant or unpleasant, they support or threaten already appreciated ideas, is using the judgment of feeling. As for the judic process a preference prefe, the most often, trusted more implicitly and be much more ready to obey. They will tend to have similar interests, since they share the same type of perception and to consider the same important things, since they share the same type of judgment. On the other hand, the people who differ on both preferences will be difficult to understand and difficult to predict - except that on each questionable question it is likely that they take opposite stands. Whatever the process they prefer, both for the detection and intuition, they will use more, paying close attention to its flow of impressions and modeling their idea of the world as it reveals the process. This text refers to an alternative Kindle edition. People perceive through their senses and also perceive things that are not and have never been present in their senses. Both types of judgment can collaborate with both types of perception. Their basic preference for the personal or impersonal approach to life causes distinguishing surface features.
